I wakeup everyday at 6am ready to grind everyday, that's assuming I didn't party too hard last night. I am still undecided in major but I feel like today might be the day.

After a long day of English class and U101, I feel like I have earned some time for myself and by that I mean to party.

I hit up all my peeps to see what's happening tonight, but no one returns my texts. Must be the stupid internet... right? I can't be spending my Monday nights alone doing schoolwork can I?

Thankfully one of my brothers , hard to imagine me as a frat bro I know, told me about this new app designed by people here at USC that shows all of the current events held by students.

I finally found this low down function on this app, it really saved my bacon. Now I can complete my ratio of 30% schoolwork and 70% partying. The app also has this stuff about something called a study group? I don't know about that it sounds like something for nerds.

Thankfully, this app has ID verification setup with our school ID so my parents wont be able to join and see what I do unlike with my facebook page.

Sarah connects with all of her friends who are already on the app and invites more to join.

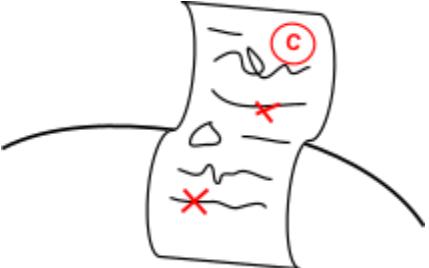

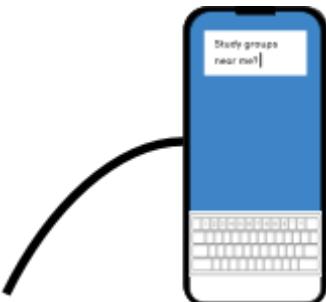

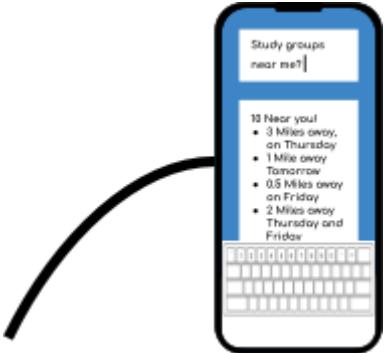

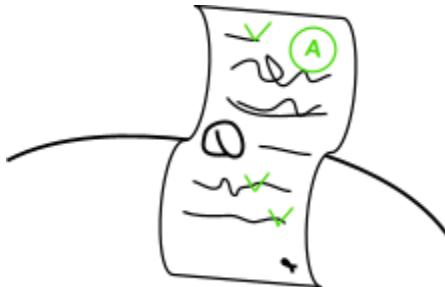

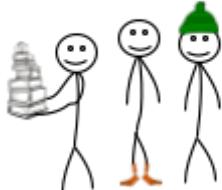

Sarah is able to see details of all the events her friends are going to in an organized interface. Based on location, time, friends attending, and host ratings, she is able to make an informed decision on how to spend her night.

Sarah has an amazing time with her friends. She doesn't feel like she missed out on anything, and she's been able to meet new people. Sarah continues to use the app to find more events to go to.
